POLITICAL MEETINGS

Two Important Ones Booked for This City This Month.

THE DEMOCRATS AND POPULISTS

National Committees of Both Parties to Assemble.

WHAT MAY RESULT

Two important political meetings are booked for this town this month. The democratic national committee will fix the time and place for holding the next national convention of that party, and the populist national committee will follow with a like performance for that party. The populists have decided to go last, in the hope of being able to adjust both their platform and their ticket to the acceptance of discontented members of the two old parties. They are expecting recruits from both.

Populist Calculations.
The populist calculation was something like this: Both the republican and the democratic will declare virtually for gold. The deliverances will be adroitly worded, but by reading between the lines the true meaning can be gathered. The republican job will be the better executed of the two. That party has the confidence of the business world, and a straddle from it will be accepted as a harmless bit of buncombe. The east will take no alarm. It will concede the matter to the populist, but will not be drawn into a platform declaring even more strongly for the gold policy than the republican platform may do.

Democrats Can't Straddle Again.
The democrats, on the other hand, will have a very hard row to hoe. They have as a party practically no credit with the business world. Their divisions are plain and revealed. They won in 1892 on a straddle. The west and the south were soothed and enthused with silver interpretations of the financial platform, while the east was told that silver was a question of time, and that silver in those circumstances could not win, no matter how urgent and threatening the situation. That straddle, however, cannot be repeated. The east has seen how very much in earnest the south and the west are on the silver question, and it will be afraid of another deliverance susceptible in any quarter of a free coinage interpretation. It will insist on a platform declaring even more strongly for the gold policy than the republican platform may do.

A Possible Bolt.
Will the democrats of the south stand this? They supply two-thirds of the votes necessary to the election of a President. But will they use this power at its full value in the minority there. The east will be able to dictate both the platform and the ticket, and the populists believe that this power will be exercised. Southern democrats, therefore, will be forced to get between accepting a gold platform, to which no meaning comforting to them can attach, or walking out of the convention. If they do walk out, they will be a free coinage cause; if they do not, the action of the convention, they must set up for themselves, or in alliance with the supporters of silver numerous enough to hold out the hope of success at the polls.

The Silver Democrats.
Assuming a bolt by the southern democrats, the populists proceed then to examine the outlook of those men. What could they hope to accomplish by simply putting a ticket of their own in the field on a platform of their own? It would be a defeat in defeat. Some of the western republicans would support it, but not in numbers sufficient to insure success. The republican party, therefore, would result in a most pronounced and complete defeat. The only hope for silver will be in a union of all the silver men, and a platform made acceptable to them, and a national convention held with that object paramourly in view.

The Expected Offer.
At this point the populists will offer themselves, and their organization, to the cause. A republican ticket will be in the field on a gold platform. The Cleveland wing of the democracy will be in the field with a ticket on a gold platform. The out-and-out silver man will have no snug place to lay his head, unless he betake himself to the field and label it demand. What is a name, except to prevent confusion? A victory for silver under any name will be a victory for silver. The republican ticket will be in the field on a gold platform. The Cleveland wing of the democracy will be in the field with a ticket on a gold platform. The out-and-out silver man will have no snug place to lay his head, unless he betake himself to the field and label it demand. What is a name, except to prevent confusion? A victory for silver under any name will be a victory for silver. The republican ticket will be in the field on a gold platform. The Cleveland wing of the democracy will be in the field with a ticket on a gold platform. THE OFFICIAL WEATHER MAP.

EXPLANATORY NOTE: Observations taken at 8 a.m., 75th meridian time. Solid lines are isobars or lines of equal air pressure, drawn for each tenth of an inch. Dotted lines are isotherms or lines of equal temperature, drawn for each ten degrees. Shaded areas are regions where rain or snow has fallen during preceding twelve hours. The words "High" and "Low" show location of areas of high and low barometer. Small arrows show the wind.

FAIR AND WARMER TONIGHT.
But Cloudy and Threatening Weather is Predicted for Tomorrow.

Weather conditions and general forecast. An area of high pressure covers the Atlantic and east gulf states. A trough of low pressure extends from the lake regions to Texas, with a storm center over Lake Superior. A second storm center will probably form in the middle Mississippi valley. An area of high pressure of great intensity covers the northern Rocky mountain districts, where the temperature is falling 20 degrees to 40 degrees, and is now 20 degrees below zero. The cold wave will advance into the gulf states and the Ohio valley during Friday, and will probably reach the Atlantic coast Saturday.

Forecast till 8 p.m. Friday.—For Delaware and Maryland, fair, followed by cloudy or threatening weather by Friday night; warmer tonight and Saturday; decidedly colder Saturday; southerly winds. For the District of Columbia, fair and warmer tonight and Saturday; southerly winds. For Virginia, fair, followed by increasing cloudiness Friday; warmer tonight; warmer in eastern portion Friday; decidedly colder Saturday; southerly winds.

POLITICAL UNREST

Leaders Are Uncertain as to Their Future Action.

PARTY DISAFFECTION IN THE SOUTH

Populists May Benefit or a New Party Be Formed.

FEELING OF SILVER MEN

There has probably never been a time in the history of Washington when the political leaders, especially those from the west, northwest, south and southwest, were so uncertain as to the future as all appear to be at present. The party lines are as closely drawn as ever, but there is an undercurrent which tells more plainly than anything else that rebellion is brewing in the ranks of the two old parties, and the prediction has been made by a great political leader that evidences of it will be seen at an early day. This had reference to the party lines in the halls of Congress, where there is likely to be less breaking away from the ranks than elsewhere.

The other night a prominent Congressman asked a Star reporter to call at his room, as he desired to talk with him. In the course of a long and interesting conversation he told many things of peculiar import which he had gathered from conferences in the halls of Congress. He is serving his third term as a Congressman, and each time has been elected as a democrat. He expects a republican nomination unless he catches the fever which seems to be taking hold more freely than ever, and the trend of his remarks caused a doubt as to his fealty to his party. By that is meant fealty under any and all circumstances, no matter to what policy every one becomes convinced that he is not. He said that he was tired of making a political speech in his district at an early date, and that he had no more ideas what to say or do than a pig. He wanted advice, and debated matters with the reporter with as much earnestness as if he had met an opponent at the stump. He did not mean to run for the wishes of his constituents, but he appeared to be honestly in doubt and in as much distress as a ship with all its motive power gone and a bad leak sprung.

Surprising Revelations.
His revelations were surprising and even sensational. He gave the names of numerous leaders of the two old parties who had told him that they did not expect to remain with the old ships which they had sailed with so long, unless there were changes in the commanders and in the plans of the vessels. He referred to the silver question and told the whole history of how it came about. Then he stated as a fact that there was a distinct compact between the leaders of the two parties, and that they would desert the democratic party if it failed to give silver the showing which they desired. "I know what a talking about," he said, "because the men have told me so with their own lips. They are not publicly proclaiming their intention of preferring to remain in party with the hope that they will control it, instead of being controlled. It is not only this way with the silver men, but with the gold men. They are ready to put out from the ship if things do not suit them. Senator Morgan and Speaker Crisp are about the only ones who are not ready to do so. They declare they will stick to the party through thick and thin."

Now that is how it stands in democratic ranks. In republican ranks it is the same way, although there is not quite so much to indicate the fact. The republican minority vote on the silver question has shown to any student of politics that there is a spirit of independence and a disregard of the party whip. The real meaning of the action is that the republican party will drop out. I confess that I disliked the democratic stand on the question and voted for the republican party. I am not alone in this. Many others shared my views. After all it was simply a game on the political checker-board without much to recommend it.

"What do the democratic silver leaders propose to do when they desert their party?" he asked. "I was asked that question, and I answered that they would desert. 'Oh,' he said, laughingly, 'they are in as big a quandary as I am about my forthcoming speech. They say they have made up their minds to desert, but they expect to do so soon. They will let actions shape themselves by events. It may, and probably will, result in a new party. I think the disaffected element will support the populists.'"

Talking of the disaffection in the south toward the present democratic leaders of the party, the Congressman said he did not believe the republicans would profit by the silver question. He said that the silver question would go to the new party. He did not know what the gold standard men would do, as he was reckoned on the south. He said that the national democratic convention opposing a double standard.

Talking about the situation in the south, the Congressman said that he was just the other day a Texas Congressman told me that his state was likely to land silver men and that he expected to do so. He said that there were a lot of personal feeling mixed with the situation, and there is no telling what that state will do next year. Mississippi is thoroughly republican, and it is more than probable that they will endorse the House bill without amendment.

The majority of the republicans will oppose the reporting of the substitute bill, but will ask that the report be postponed until Tuesday next.

A National System of Coast Defenses.
Senator Squire, chairman of the committee on coast defenses of the Senate, has called a meeting of the committee at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Mr. Craig, chief of engineers, U. S. N., will be present to give the committee information and advice upon the bill introduced by Senator Squire to provide for a national system of coast defenses. It is useful for the committee to understand the present situation of our defenses, so as to take intelligent action in the immediate future.
